SUGAR CANE IN FLORIDA

Editor Star: There is a great deal being said about cane growing in this state now and some great deals going through over the state now. I have been in the state since 1885 and have seen great progress made in cane growing in different parts of the state and it is my opinion that there is money in cane if it is put on the right kind of land and the right kind of cane is planted. To get the best returns for your money get a sandy soil, not too low, as low land is too wet for good results. Cane needs some water but too much moisture makes it too watery and it will not make as much syrup or sugar to the gallon of juice, as if grown on land that is not so wet. Overflowed land that has been drained is not so good as pine land termed flatwoods land not subject to overflow at any time. This has been learned by experience, in an adjoining county to Marion and also in one other county in the state. In the eighties there was a company that spent thousands of dollars in the cane business and today and for years past the plant that they put up has been in operation in Cuba. I will not discourage cane growing, but will say that there is more money in cane than any other field crop a man can put in if he puts it in on the right kind of land. Last year I worked on a place within four and a half miles of Altoona, Lake county, and the owner, Z. N. Brantly, had in about half an acre of cane, known as the common red cane, and a green cane known as the Simpson cane. He made 320 gallons of syrup off the patch of cane and saved seed enough to plant half an acre next year. This was on medium flatwoods pine land and no commercial fertilizer was used, it being cow-penned land. I would like to say a great deal more in regard to cane growing and if I am permitted to I will do so. Any one wanting to learn more of me about it can do so by addressing C. W. Murphy, No. 108 Lime St., Ocala, Fla.
